So, I dont know how to draw horizontal bar chart in combined chart. Memory graph mode Overview In Android App development, implementation of Android Charts play an integral part in developing database oriented apps, be it casual or professional apps. Data Analysis plays an integral part in various sectors and industries in today’s world. In sports, e.g- cricket, we see the use of charts like bar charts, line charts in various stages of the game to present the game and score analysis. In healthcare, we see the use of live real time graphs to show human health analysis like the heart rate, brain waves, etc. In the IT industry, professionals use graphical data analysis for their presentations in meetings and conferences. I have been working with FOSSASIA on the Neurolab Android App, where I had to work on this unique program mode called “Memory Graph” wherein I had to work extensively with MPAndroidChart library. While working, I understood the various use cases of charts and graphs on the Android platform. In this blog, I want to showcase the building of one part of the app with a proper tutorial. Tutorial In the Android SDK, we, the developers have been given the benefit of a tool known as GraphView. But this view being a very default and basic tool in the toolkit, has limitations in terms of customization, needs a lot of boilerplate code to set up the base to work upon. Also plotting real time graphs becomes a challenge while using the GraphView. In this tutorial, we will be focusing on the Memory Graph program mode of the app wherein we will be using an external library – MPAndroidChart to help us achieve our aim. Memory Graph 1. Firstly, open the app level build.gradle and implement the library dependency in there. implementation ‘com.github.PhilJay:MPAndroidChart:v3.1.0’ Note – The library version may change depending upon the time you are reading this blog. Refer here for the latest library updates. XML layout 1. The layout for our chart screen should be simple without any other components on the screen so that it is perfectly comfortable for the users to understand the graph and not get overwhelmed. Here, we are going to use a RelativeLayout as the parent to the Chart. For our Memory graph program mode, I worked with the LineChart view from the MPAndroidChart library. The xml code for the layout:
